

PROLIFE FACTS

Three technicians at Christchurch Public Hospital have advised management that they are no longer prepared to assist in the killing of unborn children. It was their duty to prepare instruments used for terminating the lives of the unborn. These three courageous women have the legal right to refuse to assist in the killing of the unborn on the grounds that it is contrary to their consciences.

Any doctor, nurse or other staff working in the public health service has the same right to follow their informed conscience and refuse to perform or assist in abortions. They should then seek the protection provided for their conscience by Parliament in section 46 of the 1977 Contraception, Sterilisation and Abortion Act. Public Hospitals should be places that promote a culture of life, providing healing and protection for human life from conception to natural death. The performance of abortions is not a health service. The courageous action taken by these three technicians raises serious questions about the protection of the statutory conscience rights of employees of the public health service.

It is believed that there are many persons employed by District Health Boards throughout New Zealand who are opposed to assisting in or the performing of abortions and have not been advised of their statutory right to refuse to perform or assist in abortions.

For more info about this issue, contact Right to Life (03)385 6111 or righttolifenz@gmail.com

Half page
95 x 128.5

PROLIFE FACTS

Doctors, nurses

or other staff working in the public health service have the right to follow their informed conscience and refuse to perform or assist in abortions. They should seek the protection provided for this by Parliament in section 46 of the 1977 Contraception, Sterilisation and Abortion Act.

For more info about this issue, contact Right to Life (03)385 6111 or righttolifenz@gmail.com

Eighth page
47.5 x 128.5

PROLIFE FACTS

Three technicians at Christchurch Public Hospital have advised management that they are no longer prepared to assist in the killing of unborn children. It was their duty to prepare instruments used for terminating the lives of the unborn. These three courageous women have the legal right to refuse to assist in the killing of the unborn on the grounds that it is contrary to their consciences.

Any doctor, nurse or other staff working in the public health service has the same right to follow their informed conscience and refuse to perform or assist in abortions. They should then seek the protection provided for their conscience by Parliament in section 46 of the 1977 Contraception, Sterilisation and Abortion Act.

For more info about this issue, contact Right to Life (03)385 6111 or righttolifenz@gmail.com

Quarter page
95 x 64

PROLIFE FACTS

Doctors, nurses or other staff working in the public health service have the right to follow their informed conscience and refuse to perform or assist in abortions. They should seek the protection provided for their conscience by Parliament in section 46 of the 1977 Contraception, Sterilisation and Abortion Act.

For more info about this issue, contact Right to Life (03)385 6111 or righttolifenz@gmail.com

30/10/11